

"Two recent South Vietnamese napalm bombings, which fall into the brutal category, have grievously hurt the U.S. image throughout the world. One was widely dramatized by the publication of an Associated Press photograph on March 20 which showed a child in his father's arms, badly burned by air-launched, jellied, gasoline bombs which had fired a Vietnamese village . . . Publication of the AP photo resulted in the (U.S.) Defense Department's acknowledging for the first time that napalm has been furnished South Vietnam — under the military aid program, and that it has been dropped by Vietnamese planes provided by U.S. assistance plan . . ." Washington Post 3/29/64

"WE SHOULD NEVER HAVE GONE IN THERE,
WE SHOULD NOT HAVE STAYED IN,
WE SHOULD GET OUT NOW."

Senator Wayne Morse, Oregon
3/25/64

"The time has come to reverse our policy of undertaking to defend areas such as South Vietnam . . . A return of troops to our own shores should begin . . ."

Senator Ernest Gruening, Alaska

"There has not been and there does not exist today a basis in our national interest which would justify the assumption of primary American responsibility in this situation which might well involve the sacrifice of a vast number of American lives . . ."

Senator Mike Mansfield, Montana

"After my last visit there, I again stated that we should never have gone in there and that we should get out . . . That is my advice today."

Senator Alan Ellender, Louisiana

"BY WHAT RIGHT did the Secretary of Defense go over to South Vietnam and pledge U.S. support for a 'thousand years, if necessary', in behalf of the American people. He had no such right. THE AMERICAN PEOPLE SHOULD ANSWER HIM IN NO UNCERTAIN TERMS."

Senator Wayne Morris, Oregon
